My first priority was and is the seamless continuation of my creative work. But since the years have gone by and I eventually had the pleasure to complete many of those things that I wanted and hoped to do, I felt the need and obligation to conserve my works with a fully representative manner. Their presentation is imperative as an guaranty against of any future distortion.

My first concern is the immediate presentation of my novels. Then the creation of a database accessible through the website, that will allow the future presentation of my whole work and archive, in stages, with a simple, direct and explanatory manner, contrary to its complexity.

I eventually regard the current website as one more way of personal expression. A work in a constant creation. For some time most of the subcategories will remain inactive, since everything will be presented on its on time, anyhow my novels will do for now since they consist by themselves a life's work.

Everything that is presented in the current website is my own creation in any level that has to do with conception and materialization, except if mentioned otherwise. And not a thing happened randomly, from the fonts that I use to the fact that I do not intend to get more analytical for the time being.

I suggest that you read my novels in chronological order, since you will participate this way in a very specific journey of mine that perhaps will unveil something more then if you read them randomly. On the other hand, read them in any order you like, since it may be better if you follow your instinct.

You will find excerpts from my book "The Three Books" that have to do with my personal ways that I deal with theater, cinema etc in the respective subcategories of the website (and the work that speaks for itself of course) to help your initial induction to my work. New excerpts will probably get added, until the full or partial publication of this mysterious book, which is under creation and will always be for the rest of my life.
